Remote Viewing Leads to Global Climate Change Awareness for Researcher Stephan Schwartz

In-depth interview with noted remote viewer and author Stephan A. Schwartz explores his research findings and personal conclusions about spirituality, therapeutic intention and interconnected consciousness.

Del Mar, CA, March 20, 2007 – Join host Alex Tsakiris when he interviews well known remote viewer, researcher and author, Stephan A. Schwartz about his experiences in the “mental martial art” of remote viewing.

During the 50-minute interview Schwartz explains the connection between global climate change awareness and consciousness research: “The same kind of individual choices producing aggregate effects that goes on in global climate change is precisely the same thing that’s going on, or not going on in healing research, and in the remote viewing research. All of them require that you get to a place where you realize ... all consciousness is interlinked and interdependent.”

He also discusses the spiritual aspects of his discoveries with remote viewing: “There’s only one mountain, and it’s an illusion, so how you get up it is really a matter of your own personal taste and style. Religion may be a great comfort to an individual, but there’s no one religion. There’re a lot of ways to get to awakened consciousness.”
